

People to WATCH

We asked our readers again and they told us about a wealth of talent — all under the age of 40 — that positions Silicon Valley well for another generation of leadership in innovation.

Among the 40 people we're introducing you to here are indeed some of the valley's best and brightest — lawyers and chefs, CEO's and landscape artists, financiers and even a MacArthur "genius."

They're all right here and they're all people you should know.

Enjoy.

Norman Bell
Editor

JO MILLER

Jo Miller, 35, is founder and CEO of Women's Leadership Coaching Inc., a firm that focuses on women's leadership initiatives, both in coaching and her "Poised for Leadership" seminars.

Ms. Miller has recently taken the company nationwide and her articles on career management appear at CareerBuilder.com, and in AOL and MSN career centers.

She earned a bachelor of commerce from Adelaide University and a graduate certificate in human resources from the Sydney Institute of Technology.

Her latest coaching challenge is women rabbis. Her passion is, "seeing women succeeding in corporations, especially ones that were man-dominated."

She is an avid reader and favors running, snow boarding and travel.